REIMAGINING AN AGE-FRIENDLY PRINCETON: BUILDING ON A LEGACY, SHAPING THE FUTURE

Dear Friends,

In 2014, Princeton achieved a remarkable milestone: it became the first municipality in New Jersey, and one of the very first in the United States, to be designated an Age-Friendly Community by the World Health Organization (WHO). This distinction recognized Princeton's commitment to creating a community where people of all ages can thrive, especially older adults. It was a bold and visionary step, led by Susan Hoskins and a coalition of community partners who understood that aging is not a problem to be solved, but an opportunity to be embraced.

That initial recognition launched a decade of innovation, collaboration, and investment in programs and policies that support older residents, from improvements in walkability and transportation, to expanded access to services and social participation. Today, thanks to that legacy, Princeton is once again poised to lead.

With support from the New Jersey Division of Human Services and in close collaboration with the Municipality of Princeton, the Center for Modern Aging Princeton (CMAP) is launching Age-Friendly Princeton 2.0 – a revitalized and forward-looking initiative to strengthen Princeton's age-friendly ecosystem. The first major step in this work will be a comprehensive community needs assessment focused on older adults and the livability of Princeton. This assessment will listen closely to the voices of residents and explore how well the community is meeting the needs of its aging population across key domains: housing, transportation, outdoor spaces, health services, social inclusion, civic engagement, and access to information.

A National Movement, A Local Commitment

The Age-Friendly movement that Princeton helped pioneer has grown into a global initiative and a national imperative. What began as a pilot program of the WHO in 2006 is now a robust and expansive network of more than 1,400 communities in fifty-one countries. In the United States, the effort is championed by AARP, which has helped more than 730 cities and counties join the Age-Friendly Network, touching the lives of over ninety-five million Americans.

At the heart of this movement is the recognition that communities must adapt to a rapidly aging population. By 2034, adults aged sixty-five and older will outnumber children under eighteen in the U.S. for the first time in history. This demographic shift calls for a new way of thinking about public space, service delivery, social cohesion, and intergenerational connection. As Generations Journal highlights in its article, "The History and Imperative of an Age-Friendly Ecosystem," the movement is about more than checklists and policies, it is about transforming the systems that shape how we live, age, and belong.

Research consistently affirms the value of age-friendly communities. Older adults in these communities report higher levels of well-being, reduced loneliness, greater physical and mental health, and more opportunities to stay engaged. And these benefits ripple outward, contributing to more resilient, inclusive, and economically vibrant communities for everyone.

Age-Friendly Princeton 2.0: A Vision for the Future

As CMAP and other community partners in Princeton prepare to embark on Age-Friendly Princeton 2.0, the work is grounded in two clear convictions. First, aging is a lifelong process, and building a community that supports older adults also benefits caregivers, families, children, and future generations. Second, the most powerful solutions come from listening to the people most impacted. That's why the needs assessment will be rooted in community voices, with special attention to those often left out of public planning, including low-income seniors, racial and ethnic minorities, LGBTQ+ elders, and those living with disability or chronic illness.

Over the next year, CMAP will convene older residents, municipal leaders, nonprofit partners, and community members to ask: How can we make Princeton not just a place where people grow older, but a place where people grow older well? What barriers still exist? What new opportunities can we create?

Age-Friendly Princeton 2.0 is not just a planning process, it's an invitation. An invitation to dream together, to challenge ageist assumptions, and to ensure that Princeton remains a community where aging is celebrated as a time of purpose, growth, and connection.

Continuing the Legacy

The work of building an age-friendly community is never finished. It is an ongoing act of imagination, investment, and care. Susan Hoskins and her collaborators laid the groundwork more than a decade ago, setting Princeton on a path that other communities would follow. Today, we honor that legacy by deepening the work, expanding the circle, and shaping a community that welcomes us all. To learn more or to get involved in Age-Friendly Princeton 2.0, visit www.cmapprinceton.org or contact CMAP directly. The future of Princeton is age-friendly – and it starts now.

LIFELONG LEARNING

AMERICAN ANTI-HEROINES: THE EVOLUTION OF LITERARY FEMALE VILLAINS (Zoom)

Tuesdays, July 8 through July 29, 1:00–2:00 p.m.

Fee: $40 resident, $50 nonresident

This short course explores the evolving depiction of female villains in fiction by American women writers from a period running roughly from the American Civil War to World War 2. Ranging across realist and more supernatural stories and novellas, we will be encountering issues and cultural phenomena such as gender roles, the marriage problem, class distinctions, ethnic and religious differences, and conflicts around housework, but also the afterlife, superstition, and debates about what it means to be human.

The course focuses in particular on lesser-known authors and texts, in order to widen understandings of the kinds of topics and issues covered by female writers at the time, and to move past assumptions about the outputs of “nice lady writers” in an era when first-wave feminism was building momentum on both sides of the Atlantic.

Leader: Dr. Dara Downey is a Teaching Fellow in American Literature in Trinity College Dublin, where she also teaches English on the Trinity Access Program. She is the author of American Women’s Ghost Stories in the Gilded Age (2014) and editor of The Irish Journal of Gothic and Horror Studies.

A Brief History of the Microprocessor

Here's a one-page history of the microprocessor, which debuted forty-seven years ago, and a new breed of chips that break computer speed and battery life records on Windows and Mac computers.

The central processing unit (CPU) inside your computer is the engine that runs applications like Word and Mail, responds to commands, saves files, prints documents, renders webpages, and manages files and folders.

Today's CPUs, or "microprocessors," are typically no more than one or two square inches. Intel unveiled its first microprocessor, the 8086, in June 1978. This "computer-on-a-chip" packed 30,000 transistors and associated components on something small enough to make personal computers a reality.

In 1979, Motorola introduced its microprocessor, the 68000, which Apple used in its first Mac computers. The Motorola and Intel CPUs weren't interchangeable; each used its own instruction set. An application designed on an Intel 8086 couldn't run on a Motorola 68000, so the first Mac and Windows computers weren't compatible.

For many years, the Intel 8086 and its early progeny dominated the personal PC market – notably the IBM PC – which is why Microsoft developed Windows to run on the 8086 CPU. Over time, Intel introduced faster x86 CPUs like the 80386, Pentium, and Core series. AMD joined in 1982 with its own x86 CPUs. Today's Windows PCs still use x86-based Intel Core or AMD Ryzen CPUs containing billions of transistors that can execute billions of steps per second.

Sharon seems delighted with her new computer. She probably needs glasses.

In 2006, Apple migrated to Intel x86-based CPUs, allowing Mac and Windows to play together. All seemed well.

But there was Trouble in River City. While Windows and Mac laptops were shrinking into their sleek notebook form, the newer x86 CPUs demanded more power, ran hot, and drained computer batteries after only a few hours.

A Call to ARMs

To solve this dilemma, Apple designed its very own microprocessors for its MacBook computers based on the CPUs in its fast and battery-friendly iPhones and iPads. These microprocessors use a simpler instruction set licensed from ARM LLC, are highly energy efficient, and include "neural" memory for AI applications. In 2020, Apple introduced its MacBook with this new ARM-based CPU – dubbed the M1 – and abandoned Intel's x86. Apple rewrote its software to work on both M1 and Intel processors, ensuring compatibility with older Mac computers for the time being.

The new M1 MacBooks handily outperformed most Intel-based Windows computers. To respond, Microsoft developed a new version of Windows 11 to run on Qualcomm's ARM-based Snapdragon CPU found in many Android smartphones and tablets. These computers are part of a new collection of Windows-based "Copilot+ PCs" competitively priced with their traditional Intel and AMD brethren. They're fast, run cool, and have long battery life.

Should you buy a Copilot+ PC? We'll explore this new flavor of Windows computers next month.

TRANSPORTATION

CROSSTOWN

Crosstown is a door-to-door transportation service for those who are age sixty-five and up, and people with disabilities who live in the municipality of Princeton. - Age sixty-five and up, OR have a physical disability
- Able to get yourself to the car and in/out of the car without assistance
- Registered with the Crosstown program through CMAP at 609.751.9699

Rides between the hours of 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. on weekdays must be reserved no later than noon on the business day before the scheduled ride. Rides can be scheduled for any purpose between any points of origin and destination within the municipality, but medical appointments at Penn Medicine Princeton Health or at the Princeton Fitness and Wellness Centers (in both Princeton and Plainsboro) will receive priority. Spotlight on Princeton Theological Seminary

Continuing the Journey: Discover Lifelong Learning at Princeton Seminary

Learning doesn't end with a degree. For many, the most meaningful spiritual questions and the most urgent social ones arise after formal education. Princeton Theological Seminary invites lifelong learners, lay leaders, caregivers, and the spiritually curious to keep asking, keep growing, and keep engaging faith in a complex and changing world.

From on-campus and community events to flexible online courses and podcasts, Princeton Theological Seminary makes theological formation accessible and relevant, whether you're exploring new questions in retirement, serving your community through ministry or advocacy, or simply drawn to deeper reflection.

The newly launched Princeton Seminar Series is a virtual offering of seminars that explore questions at the intersection of faith, community, and aging. Through four online, synchronous sessions, participants engage leading scholars and practitioners in rich conversations about how to live wisely and faithfully through every season of life.

Upcoming seminars include:

- Thinking Politically with Luther (September 2025)
- Theology and Psychological Suffering: Depression, Addiction, and Eating Disorders (October 2025)
- Leadership Lessons from the Old Testament (December 2025)

Each offering provides practical insight for real-world concerns while grounding participants in the Seminary's tradition of rigorous, theologically grounded exploration.

The Seminary also hosts a rich calendar of lectures, concerts, and gatherings both on campus and at The Farminary, the Seminary's 21-acre regenerative farm, which will celebrate its 10th anniversary from September 24-27. The anniversary event includes time on the farm, time with one another, and time with some of the brightest minds continuing to shape conversations related to ecology and theology, food justice, sabbath, and more, including Willie Jennings, Barbara Brown Taylor, Jeff Chu, Michael Twitty, Tiya Myles, and Heber Brown, among others.

Whether you're a pastor, educator, volunteer, retiree, or seeker, at Princeton Theological Seminary, you'll find offerings that challenge, inspire, and accompany you on your journey. Visit ptsem.edu to learn more.
